Notorious activist collective Palestine Action have claimed responsibility for another overnight attack against a Canadian business, this time targeting CMC Electronics in Montreal's Saint-Laurent borough on November 9.

This represents the latest attack claimed by Palestine Action Canada following four vandalism incidents against Canadian businesses associated with Israeli defence manufacturer Elbit Systems. The group have also claimed responsibility for attacks on two Scotiabank branches in Toronto and Montreal.

CMC Electronics, a Canadian avionics manufacturer, was identified as a target in the Arms Embargo Now campaign toolkit, which lists companies activists accuse of supporting Israel's military industry.

The toolkit alleges that CMC shipped equipment to Elbit facilities in Israel, identifying dozens of shipments. The company's Montreal address is also published in the document.

In its latest Instagram statement, Palestine Action Canada accused CMC of supplying Elbit with navigation-related equipment, including Doppler velocity sensors and antennas.

The group signaled an escalation in their campaign, threatening to return to the facility despite increased security.

"Palestine Action Canada will keep paying visits to CMC until they DROP ELBIT," the organization declared.

The far-left "direct action" college says that increased security and mobile surveillance units would not prevent future actions.

The statement marks yet another instance in which a company publicly identified by anti-Elbit campaigners was subsequently targeted in an operation claimed by Palestine Action Canada.

The previous four businesses were Héroux-Devtek in Longueuil, Quebec, in April; Dishon Limited in Vaughan, Ontario, in July; DSV Logistics in Montreal in July; and GeoSpectrum Technologies in Peterborough, Ontario, in October.

Palestine Action Canada has similarly published claims of responsibility for these incidents through its social media accounts, promoting property destruction as part of its goal to pressure businesses into severing relationships with Elbit.

The extent of damage at CMC and whether Montreal police are investigating are not yet known.

The United Kingdom declared Palestine Action a terrorist organization in July 2025. The United States subsequently designated the UK-based organization under its terrorism sanctions regime in August 2026.

Despite calls for similar action in Canada, Public Safety Canada has declined to say whether Palestine Action Canada was being assessed for a terrorist designation.
